The London Centre for Psychotherapy

The London Centre for Psychotherapy has its origins in the 1950s and became a registered charity in 1974. Its activities are threefold:

- To offer training in psychoanalytic psychotherapy (including analytical psychology) in which the leading schools of analytic thought and practice are represented,
- To organise post-graduate professional activities, and,
- To provide a psychotherapy service to the community through its clinic.

The Centre is the professional association of around 200 practising psychotherapists who are registered, through the Centre, with the British Confederation of Psychotherapists.
