This book would not have been possible without the opportunities granted to me over the years to teach and research in the area of sport. In this I thank my colleagues at the International Centre for Sports History and Culture at De Montfort University, and those at Boston College. At Boston College Ireland my ever present friends and colleagues always provide a wonderful working environment, and have always given much inspiration and support. I would particularly like to acknowledge the stimulation given to me over the years by the work and support of four sports scholars, namely Doug Booth, Jeff Hill, Dan Nathan, and Murray Phillips, who have pushed a cultural awareness of sport that is helping redefine the field. A small group of people provided day to day motivation and advice, and some also read drafts of the book. In all that they did, these people helped me focus, spotted the gaps, and shaped the work, and so a huge debt of gratitude to Robert Colls, Mark Duncan, Kevin Kenny, Tara Magdalinski, Dilwyn Porter, and Paul Rouse. Most central in all my engagements with sport, in life and in the classroom, and through the writing of this book, has been the friendship and advice of Richard Holt. Few people know as much as him about the history of sport, and his eye for detail and style make him a wonderful reader to have on board.

The staff at Oxford University Press were a delight to work with, and Jenny Nugee, Emma Ma, and Carrie Hickman all helped
