

ffolkes

Draw Cartoons

"Sorry, Charlie, nobody's perfect."

Draw Cartoons

Series editors: David and Brenda Herbert

First published 1982
New style of paperback binding 1997
by A & C Black (Publishers) Limited
35 Bedford Row, London WC1R 4JH

Reprinted 1999

eISBN13 - 978-1-4081-0730-0

© 1982 A & C Black (Publishers) Limited

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without the prior permission in writing of A & C Black (Publishers) Limited.

Printed in Great Britain by Martins the Printers, Berwick-upon-Tweed

Contents

Making a start	4
What to draw with	8
What to draw on	10
Line and watercolour	11
Perspective	12
Composition	13
Essential lines	14
The right proportions	16
A cartoon step by step	18
Saying something personal	20
Simplicity and impact	22
Variety	24
Situations	30
Action	32
Caricature	34
A true likeness	38
Tooth and claw	40
Different subjects, different media	44
Finished works	46
Envoi	48

Making a start

Drawing cartoons can be either a hobby or a profession, to amuse your friends or try to make an editor laugh. The second is very difficult. The person you are most likely to amuse is yourself (which is very satisfying).

To be a cartoonist requires two simple things, neither of which are really simple. You have to think funny and you have to draw in a way that the reader can understand. The thinking funny is something that can't be taught, but this book may help you to get your ideas on paper.

It will be hard work as, unlike many other titles in this series which specialize in a particular subject such as cats, children or trees, you will have to learn to draw everything – possibly even including armadillos! (see page 40).

The dreaded piece of blank paper