Acknowledgements

A practical book such as this is derived from day to day experience of using practical methods of working with children. For that reason, the authors feel they have been helped most of all by the clients, boys who have been resident in the Gilbey programme, with whom the practices described here have been developed and elaborated. Without their co-operation, criticism and encouragement, there would have been nothing to say.

Colleagues who have contributed thoughts, tried out various practices, and provided guidance and support have been: all the staff in Gilbey; Curt Braukmann, Cathy Kirigin and their colleagues at the University of Kansas; Peter Lewis, Mark O'Callaghan and Sue Spence from the Masters Course in Clinical Psychology at the University of Birmingham; Mike Jarman, Derek Meanwell, Dave Hughes, Trevor Green, Dick Lord, Richard Alexander, Mike Chamarette, Pam Teare and Jenny Stevenson from Tennal; and many other people too numerous to mention. To all of these, our thanks for being so supportive and constructive. Our thanks, too, to the Cadbury Barrow Trust, and the Grantham York Trust, for providing financial support for visits to various social learning programmes in the U.S.A. and Canada.

Finally, our thanks are due in large measure to Faith Eyles and Doreen Needham, who fought their way through various drafts of the book, typing, checking and collating with tact, and forbearance, and not a little patience.
