PREFACE

It has been almost twenty years since Prof. Cherniss published the last complete bibliography on Plato (see below, no. 4554). Since that time, scholarly activity on Plato and Socrates has continued to increase, and the vast amount of material which has been published makes it difficult for even the most diligent to be aware of all the work that has been done, even on particular subjects concerning these two philosophers. The present volume requires no further justification, and my hope is that it will be of value to those doing research on Socrates and Plato.

My intent has been to provide bibliographical information on all scholarly work which was published on Plato and Socrates during the years 1958 through 1973. Of these limits 1958 was selected because Cherniss' work covers the years 1950–1957.¹ My choice of 1973 as the upper limit was due to the availability of bibliographical resources during the time the present bibliography was being compiled. I was able to be confident of a much greater degree of completeness for the years through 1973 than for more recent years.

The work provides bibliographical references to the materials it covers. In this respect it falls short of Cherniss' work, which is a model of a critical bibliography. The decision to omit what would surely have been a valuable feature of the work was determined by considerations of space and time. Even with the basic information I have provided, the book is longer and more expensive than one might wish, and I fear that a thorough bibliography raisonnée might easily have been three times as long. Further, there was the obstacle presented by the sheer mass of materials. In 1959 Prof. Cherniss wrote, 'It is improbable that any one person, however erudite, alert, and devoted, could read cursorily, not to say critically, all the books, articles, sections of books, and reviews concerned with Plato which have been published during the last decade.”² This statement is still more true for the period since 1958, when the annual scholarly output on Plato has doubled (from fewer than 150 items in 1959 to over 300 items³ by 1970). The evident impossibility of doing an adequate or thorough job of locating, not to mention reading and summarizing, the materials listed (which are written in more than thirty languages) therefore made the present form of the work a necessity.

One of the frequent problems I encountered in working on this project was deciding whether to include or exclude a particular work which dealt with Socrates or Plato only incidentally. My aim was to include all materials primarily concerned with Socrates and Plato, and other works which make a contribution to our understanding of the two philosophers, but these principles (especially the latter) were not easy to apply uniformly.

I somewhat arbitrarily chose to include mention of chapters on Socrates and Plato in histories of ancient philosophy, but to exclude general histories of philosophy or of Western philosophy. Also, I made no effort to locate general histories of ethics, political philosophy or other branches of philosophy, or indeed of other areas of thought (such as mathematics) which might contain chapters on Socrates and Plato, although I have included a few representative examples of such works.

The bibliography is arranged topically. In the selection of topics I have tended to follow Cherniss, with only a few exceptions (principally additional categories) which I did not hesitate to make when the materials at my disposal justified them. Cherniss’ observation that “in the study of Plato no neat classification corresponds to the subject-matter, for the treatment of any aspect of Plato’s thought is likely to depend upon the interpretation of many other aspects and to affect all these others in turn”⁴ should provide sufficient warning to users of the present work. I have attempted to alleviate this difficulty to some degree by cross-references which appear at the end of each section. Further assistance is provided by Special Indices listing the works largely devoted to a number of particular topics within the general areas of Plato's thought that I have identified in Section V.

Since users of this book will be chiefly concerned with locating the books and articles included, I have made an effort to indicate when a book has had more than one edition and when an article has been reprinted. A number of collections of articles and excerpts from books on Socrates and Plato appeared during the period covered, and I have put these in a separate section (XIV) and have located the articles they contain in the appropriate categories throughout the book. A result of this policy has been the inclusion of a number of papers originally published before 1958. I have also included older books which were reprinted during the period covered. It seemed to me that, for example, a person studying the Sophist would be interested to learn that Lewis Campbell's 1867 edition of that dialogue was currently available.

The works placed in each category are arranged chronologically and alphabetically (by author) within each year. I have made exceptions to this principle when an author wrote a series of works on a single subject and in some cases where a work provoked one or more discussions, rebuttals, etc. In these cases the latter works are placed immediately after the first one. Further, some subjects (Sections IA, IB, VIIA and XIV) seemed better served by a straight alphabetical arrangement and others (mainly translations of Plato's works) appeared more usefully arranged by language. I have designated books, dissertations and other monographs with an asterisk and have listed as many reviews for these as have come to my attention. I do not claim to have located every review, but have covered the major philosophical and classical journals. I have used the periodical abbreviations found in L'Année Philologique wherever possible, and have coined abbreviations for journals not covered by that work. A list of the abbreviations used is provided below.

I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge my debts of gratitude to Ms. C. L. Claxton for her assistance at the beginning of the project; to Ms. M. Smith and the reference staff at the Honnold Library of the Claremont Colleges for their helpful and patient assistance; to Profs. C. Weber of Kenyon College and T. Mizutani of Tokyo University for generous assistance in locating Japanese materials; to Mr. L. Jones and the consulting staff at the Seaver Computer Center of the Claremont Colleges for the many hours they devoted to giving me advice and instruction and writing programs for use in the project; and to Ms. W. J. Lewis for her efficient and enthusiastic help in the final stages. I would also like to thank Pomona College for the research grant and liberal computer policy without which the present work could not have been completed.

It is almost conventional to apologize for errors a book may be found to contain, and the present case is no exception. I am sure that there are some studies of Socrates and Plato which I failed to locate and errors in some of the entries as they presently stand. The computer I used on the project enabled me to avoid many mistakes and inconsistencies, and proofreading disclosed many more, but in a project of this type and this magnitude I have come to realize that indeed errare humanum est. For the remaining mistakes I do apologize.

I: GENERAL STUDIES ON PLATO

A: BOOKS ON PLATO

This section contains books on Plato generally. It also contains articles dealing directly with those books. These articles are placed immediately after the book they treat. In some cases a book will emphasize one or more areas of Plato's life but still be too broad for inclusion in any single category.
