Marx and the End of Orientalism

Bryan S. Turner

Marx and the End of Orientalism

First published in 1978, this title analyses a range of problems that arise in the study of North Africa and the Middle East, bridging the gap between studies of Sociology, Islam, and Marxism. Both Sociology and the study of Islam draw on an Orientalist tradition founded on an idealist epistemology, ethnocentric values and an evolutionary view of historical development. Bryan Turner challenges the basic assumptions of Orientalism by considering such issues as the social structure of Islamic society, the impact of capitalism in the Middle East, the effect of Israel on territories, revolutions, social classes and nationalism.

A detailed and fascinating study, Marx and the End of Orientalism will be of particular interest to students studying the sociology of colonialism and development, Marxist sociology and sociological theory.

It would have been impossible to complete this study without the active support of the 'Hull group' for Middle East studies (especially Talal Asad, Roger Owen, David Seddon and David Waines) which is the main organ in Britain for the critique of Orientalism. I have derived enormous benefit from sharp disagreements with Sami Zubaida over what does or does not constitute a problem for Marxism. For their patient attempts to correct my ideological views of social reality, I am grateful to Nicholas Abercrombie, John Martin, Susan Shipley and John Urry at the University of Lancaster. Tom Bottomore and Mike Mulkay have been generous in providing encouragement and guidance over the contents and organisation of this book. My principal thanks, however, go to my wife without whose domestic labour all of this would have been in vain.
