Introduction to the First Edition

I. Scope of the Directory

The New International Dictionary of Acronyms in Library and Information Science and Related Fields was developed in response to the growing number of acronyms that occurs in the professional literature around the world. It lists acronyms used in library and information science and the related fields of publishing, printing, archive management, journalism, and reprography. Some acronyms in computer science are also included, but strictly technical terms are omitted since many dictionaries in this area are already available. Also included are some acronyms related to the fields of management, specialized vocabularies, and the organization of science and cultural life.

The acronyms reproduced here represent institutions, library and information systems, some methods, professional problems and equipment, programming languages, and titles of publications, especially periodicals, bibliographies, and other reference sources.

Generally, recent acronyms are listed, but the Dictionary includes older forms, as well. Inclusion is limited to acronyms that appear in the text of publications. Abbreviations used in bibliographical references are not included.

The international character of the Dictionary should be emphasized. Not only acronyms found in the well-known international languages, but forms encountered in many less popular languages or those used in Central and Eastern Europe, Asia, Africa, and Latin American countries are included. The lengthy lists of abbreviations for countries and languages that are appended to this Introduction provide concrete evidence of the truly international scope realized here.

Sources evaluated for this compilation include current professional periodicals, particularly in the fields of library and information science, current national and international bibliographies, monographs and manuals on bibliography and related fields, professional encyclopedias and lexicons, national and international dictionaries of abbreviations, guides to libraries, information centres and data bases, guides to international organizations, and terminological dictionaries.

The authors are much indebted to the publication, Miedzynarodowy slownik akronimow z zakresu informacji naukowej, bibliotekoznawstwa i dziedzin pokrewnych – An international dictionary of acronyms in library and information science and related fields, edited by Henryk Sawoniak and published by Ossolineum in Wrocław in 1976. While acronyms from this work have been included here with some omissions and many corrections, the present edition is far more voluminous, listing 28,500 forms as compared to 12,700 in the 1976 book.

II. Entry Form and Elements

1. Acronyms are expanded in the language of the official name, when known. In an official name is unknown, an English form is given in square brackets. An English translation of names in some lesser known languages (e.g. Hungarian, Finnish, Turkish), as well as notes on the function or focus of an organization, may also be given in square brackets.

2. Variant acronym forms for the same organization, acronyms of related and parent organizations, and variant forms of an acronym (including the equivalent form in another language), are given in parentheses. Equivalent forms are preceded by an equal sign. An equivalent form in another language is followed by an abbreviation for the appropriate language. An organization's country and place of residence are also shown in parentheses.

3. The titles of publications are given in italics.
4. Changes in the name or structure of an organization are shown in the body of the entry by arrows.
← refers from the form for an earlier name or acronym
→ refers to the form for a later name or acronym
5. Superscript "o" before an acronym given in parentheses in the body of an entry serves as a link to the parent organization in a multiple-reference entry, thus:
"(^oALA-US)" in the body entry 1 refers to
"(^oAmerican Library Association)" under "ALA" in the entry 2
6. Superscript "*" before an acronym (e.g. "*MSNTI) denotes a transliteration from the Cyrillic alphabet. Transliterations are based on ISO standard, International System for the Transliteration of Slavic Cyrillic Characters, 2nd ed (ISO/R9-1968). Transliterated acronyms that are identical to Latin forms are entered separately following the Latin form.
7. For the sake of uniformity, all acronyms are presented without punctuation (e.g. BUCOP, not B.U.C.O.P.), regardless of actual usage. All developed forms begin with a capital letter regardless of national usage.
8. Generally, a date or dates displayed in an entry indicate the year of establishment and/or dissolution of an organization. Since dates often vary according to sources, the dates given in the Dictionary may not be precise or may not always indicate an organization's exact span of activity.
9. The abbreviation int identifies an international organization.
10. Language and country abbreviations are taken from the ISO standards Symbols for Languages, Countries and Authorities (ISO/R 639-1967) and Codes for the Representation of Names of Countries (ISO 3166-1974). In general, English, French, German, and Russian forms are not given.

III. Arrangement of Entries

1. Acronyms are arranged letter by letter to the end of the character string. Character strings may be separated by spaces, slashes, hyphens, ampersands, or other signs, so that "A/V", for example, files before "AA".
2. Letters modified by diacritical or other marks file as if they were not modified.
3. Numerals are disregarded in filing, e.g. "C3S" files as "CS".
4. Acronyms written in upper-case file before acronyms in lower-case.

In spite of the large number of examples included in this Dictionary, the list is far from exhaustive. Nevertheless, the authors hope it will serve as useful aid for researchers in the current as well as retrospective professional literature in many languages.

Introduction to the Second Edition

In the world where the notions of time saving and rapidity are prevailing, we communicate more and more frequently by using abbreviations and acronyms. These abbreviations have given birth to a new language which needs to be decoded in any written communication.

The second edition of the "New International Dictionary of Acronyms in Library and Information Science and Related Fields" is a valuable decoding tool for 33,600 forms of acronyms. Some 5,100 new forms have been created during the past five years. Mistakes contained in the 1988 edition have been corrected.

Introduction to the Third Edition

In a world where the notions of time saving and rapidity are prevailing, we communicate more and more frequently by using abbreviations and acronyms. These abbreviations have created a new language which is changing constantly and needs to be decoded in any written communication.

The third edition of the "New International Dictionary of Acronyms in Library and Information Science and Related Fields" is a valuable decoding tool for over 35,000 forms of acronyms. Some 1,500 new acronyms were added to the second edition of 1992. The mistakes contained in the second edition have been corrected.
