Preface

The publication of this second edition of IFLA's International Directory of Art Libraries is a testament to the excellent health of the formal and informal association between people interested in the documentation of art and its history. As society changes, librarians are in the forefront of exploiting high technologies; and it is precisely their energetic drive which made this publication possible. In 1996 the Section of Art Libraries made an electronic Directory available on IFLA's Web-site. This printed Directory is in effect the hardback version of the electronic Directory as it was at one given moment, 21 June 1997, date of the Summer solstice in the Northern hemisphere, Winter solstice in the Southern.

Days grow longer or shorter, depending on where you are. Yet today we can deliver a message instantaneously to someone else in any of many places on the planet. This capability has had an immense impact on our interaction. In an extraordinary way which was not foreseen in 1985 the daily thoughts of art librarians are communicated to each other in a thousand instant moments, without having to be concerned about differing times of day across the globe.

Yet the traditional book has its place as well. Not only because not everyone is yet connected to a machine -- although the daily growth of people connecting for the first time is near vertiginous -- but also since the book as an object has its own inherent value. In one sense it is an object at rest. It has the quality of a snapshot, an ultimate moment which can be revisited time and time again. It is a three-dimensional object in a near steady state for as long as it survives. There is therefore a delightful reality about this Directory, a reality which provides the point of rest from which its alter ego of endlessly instantaneous change in the electronic universe can properly be fathomed.

This book is at once a work in which we can discover that which we did not know about each other, as well as a group photograph for the next generation, a group photograph which celebrates what we have achieved collectively in the history of art. The publication of this book was made possible by many. Its origins lie in the Art Section's determination to make resources known to those who are custodians and those who exploit the world of documented art. Without the continuous cross-inspiration between a dedicated group of art librarians the momentum for creating the electronic databank could not have been kept up. ARLIS/NA deserves our gratitude for undertaking the development of the Directory in electronic form, and especially Thomas Hill, staunchly supported by Vassar College, for single-mindedly pursuing the objective. Through his inspiring guidance many became involved in the enterprise; we are in their debt. IFLA's dedicated Headquarters staff, specifically Carol Henry, Executive Officer and responsible for publications, who so graciously accepted seeing one date of delivery go by after another in the pursuit of accuracy, deserve our thanks. And finally our thanks to our publishers, KG Saur, who share our vision of the value of interconnectivity.

Introduction

The International Directory of Art Libraries has been compiled to serve as a finding aid to 2,781 art, architecture, and archeology libraries and library departments, as well as to their professional personnel, throughout the world. This printed edition of the Directory has been produced as an alternative to the electronic edition, available through the IFLA Section of Art Libraries' Worldwide Web site since January 1996 at <http://vassar.vassar.edu/ifla-idal>, for librarians and art researchers who do not have convenient access to the electronic edition.

Designed to facilitate professional cooperation among art librarians as well as to provide a resource for art research, the Directory is the product of the cooperative effort of over sixty individual librarians as well as three international and four national art library organizations. Contributing individuals include fifty-three regional coordinators from forty-nine countries who conducted surveys of their geographic areas and edited returned data, and members of the International Relations Committee of the Art Libraries Society of North America who designed the survey questionnaire and administered the project over a period of two years. Over the course of the survey the questionnaire was translated into Arabic, Bulgarian, Chinese, Czech, French, German, Hungarian, Italian, Polish, Portuguese, Rumanian, Russian, Serbo-Croatian, Slovenian, and Spanish, and distributed in ninety-six countries which returned data. In addition, much data has been refreshed, and new libraries entered, from information provided by means of an online questionnaire at the electronic site.

Time limitations and the scope of our undertaking have constrained us to be less ambitious than our predecessors in gathering information on library collections and services. Researchers requiring descriptive collection information beyond volume totals should refer to the 1985 IFLA Directory of Art Libraries by Jacqueline Viaux, which the present directory seeks to update, along with the national directories of art libraries listed on our web site. In addition, the Worldwide Web is quickly becoming an excellent source for finding detailed information about individual libraries and their collections, where already hundreds of library sites convey more descriptive information through their electronic pages (many include remote access to online catalogs) than could practically be compiled in any printed directory.

This Directory does provide information on over four thousand individual librarians, and includes individual electronic mail addresses whenever possible. While information on personnel is difficult to keep current, we include it in response to the opportunity for unrestricted international professional communication emerging as increasing numbers of individual librarians acquire electronic mail accounts. We also include this listing in order to provide better access for researchers to the wealth of human resources that are an essential aspect of what libraries have to offer.

I am fortunate to have had so much cooperation from so many individuals in the preparation of this data, and would especially like to thank Jan van der Wateren and Maggie Wisnau, current and past chairpersons of the Section of Art Libraries, and also Betty Jo Irvine and Irena Murray of ARLIS/NA, for their early and continued support. I am also exceedingly grateful to all of the directory regional coordinators listed on page xiii, many of whom have labored for many weeks distributing, editing, translating, and often re-distributing survey questionnaires for their regions.

Arrangement and Presentation of Entries

Entries are arranged first by country, then by city, then institution title. Libraries which are part of larger institutions such as universities are generally classed under the larger institution title. English has been employed as the international language to which country names have been standardized. Official country names follow the English header in the text where these differ, and also appear in the table of contents. City names appear italicized and in bold in the text in the form in which they were received, which with few exceptions is their local designation.

Data elements as they appear in each entry are listed below. We have omitted from this printed version of the directory data for institutional URL's which appear as links in the electronic version, since these can be obtained through the electronic site at <http://iberia.vassar.edu/ifla-idal> at the time of use. Idiosyncrasies and irregularities which appear in the form and language of data for various elements among individual national lists is the result of our survey method and our wish to generally follow the direction of our regional coordinators.

The numeric listings in the Index of Institutions and the Personnel Index refer to record number. Institutions are listed in their own languages for English, French, Spanish, Portuguese, and German. Other listings are translated into English, although many are additionally listed in their native forms. Personal names are alphabetized according to national customs.
