About the Author

Edward Guinness is a software developer who has been programming since before the birth of Windows 1.0. A great love of programming has led Edward through a career involving mainframes, mini-computers, PCs, and many different programming languages. As a software development hiring manager since 2004, Edward has interviewed and worked alongside hundreds of programmers in New Zealand, Australia, the United Kingdom, and India.

In 2012 Edward founded SocialCoder, a volunteering organization for programmers, designers, and other technical people.

Edward lives in the town of Flitwick, England, with his wife and two daughters.

Acknowledgments

Writing this book has been an incredible experience for me, and it has only been possible because of the following people.

First of all, a huge thank you to my wife, Lisa, for her constant support, for her angelic patience, and for her unwavering belief that I would, eventually, send the final chapter to the publisher.

To my beautiful daughters, Danielle and Laura, thank you for giving up some of our play time so I could write about programming and pirates. (The pirates are in Chapter 11.)

I have been fortunate to have had comments and suggestions from two excellent technical editors, Elizabeth Naramore and Todd Meister. Thank you both. Thanks also to Matthew-Baxter Reynolds for providing valuable comments in the early stages.

Many thanks to the superb team at John Wiley & Sons; acquisitions editor Carol Long, project editor Maureen Spears, copy editor Paula Lowell, and production editor Christine Mugnolo.

To Keith Purdie and Jacob Fardell at the Bedford i-Kan Business Centre; thank you for providing the best flexible working space in Bedfordshire, for your patient good humor, and for putting up with my mood swings, from jelly baby dispensing mania to sullen, hunched-over silence at the keyboard.

Finally, to the programmers I've interviewed and worked alongside over the years, thank you for giving me the best education a hiring manager can have. Most of the truly important things I learned about interviewing I learned from you.
